How Some Things Linger: Memory, Poetry and Robert Frost

By Catherine Charlwood

Catherine Charlwood studied for both her BA in English Literature and MPhil in American Literature at Sidney Sussex College, University of Cambridge. She is currently engaged in a thesis entitled 'Models of Memory: Cognition and Cultural Memory in the Versification of Thomas Hardy and Robert Frost' at the University of Warwick, under the supervision of Dr. Liz Barry. Catherine is a Fulbright American Studies Scholar for 2013-14 and last summer visited a number of Ivy League colleges as part of her research. This current trip is sponsored by a Warwick Transatlantic Fellowship. A former secondary school teacher, Catherine continues to work in educational outreach. Outside of literature, Catherine is a keen dancer and choreographer.
